Abstract

This article is the introduction to the special issue on 'Critical and Alternative Approaches to Leadership Learning and Development'. This article reviews the past approaches to researching and theorising about leadership learning and development and proposes a shift towards critical and alternative approaches. This article then describes the various articles in the special issue and how they contribute towards this paradigm shift.

Keywords

Critical management education, leadership development, learning

Introduction

The initial idea for this special issue originated in the theme and contributions to the second Developing Leadership Capacity Conference (DLCC) held at the Bristol Business School in 2010, the theme of which was critical reflections and practical answers for leadership development and learning. The conference produced some in-depth and critical discussions regarding alternative views of leadership development, with the following year's conference – on the theme of
