"In a breathtakingly provocative and original study that forever de-mythologizes the masculinist west of Owen Wister and Wallace Stegner, Krista Comer makes a persuasive case that there is a new literary female regionalism and that the heart of this new regionalist sensibility is decidedly feminist and postmodern. . . . Comer uncovers how these new female regionalists imaginatively relate to, construct, and narratively inhabit their many different western landscapes."—Annette Kolodny, University of Arizona

"This landmark book is a deft and gracefully written survey of the 'new female regionalism' in U.S. literary and cultural studies. Comer splendidly integrates urban geography, ethnic studies, feminist studies, and literary detail in a cross-cultural framework that neither fragments nor totalizes."—José David Saldívar, University of California, Berkeley

"Always politically engaged and risk-taking, Comer creates a new multi-ethnic literary landscape in the American West."—Melody Graulich, editor, Western American Literature

In the early 1970s, empowered by the civil rights and women's movements, a new group of women writers began speaking to the American public. However, despite the attentions of publishers, the media, and millions of readers, literary scholars have rarely addressed this movement or its writers.

Too many critics, still enamored of western images that are both masculine and antimodern, have been slow to reckon with the emergence of a new, far more "feminine," postmodern, multiracial, and urban west. Here, Krista Comer calls for a redesign of the field of western cultural studies, one that engages issues of gender and race and is more self-conscious about space itself—especially that cherished symbol of western "authenticity," open landscape. Surveying works by Joan Didion, Wanda Coleman, Maxine Hong Kingston, Leslie Marmon Silko, Barbara Kingsolver, Pam Houston, Louise Erdrich, Sandra Cisneros, and Mary Clearman Blew, Comer shows how these and other contemporary women writers have mapped new geographical imaginations upon the cultural and social spaces of today's American West.

Krista Comer teaches English and women's studies at Rice University in Houston, Texas.
